

Middle School Endorsement Faculty

Dr. Kris Crabtree-Groff spent 13 years as a middle school teacher and 4 years as a school improvement consultant. She is currently an Assistant Professor of Teaching and Learning at Drake University where she teaches courses in middle school and secondary methods, reading and interdisciplinary curriculum, middle school growth and development, and issues in adolescent literacy. Her research interests include optimal learning environments for young adolescents and the training of pre-service teachers.

Keri Schlueter is currently the principal at Carlisle Middle School. During her past 13 years in education, she has worked as a middle school teacher, coach, athletic director, and associate principal. She has extensive experience with facilitation, and has presented many seminars and inservices on a range of topics related to the middle school environment. Keri has pursued many professional growth activities, including earning her doctoral degree this past February at Drake University. Keri is the instructor for EDUC 234: Middle School Curriculum and Methods.